Here's How to File It Under One Patent:

◆ Patent Title Example:

“Systems and Methods for Conditional Digital Object Minting, Routing, and Execution Based on Trigger-Validated Behavioral Logic and Networked Neuro-Logical Structures.”

◆ Abstract Snippet:

“...A system enabling the creation and directional routing of programmable digital artifacts (tokens or logic capsules) upon the successful validation of contextual triggers, forming a modular, traceable decision network — referred to herein as Validation Neuro-Netting™.”

◆ Independent Claim (Core Logic Flow):

Covers the general method (action → validation → mint → route → execute)

◆ Dependent Claims:

Include:

- Mint-to-Burn
- Mint-to-Access
- Mint-to-Code
- Validation Neuro-Netting as a distributed logic routing system

Why It's Legal to Include Together:

According to USPTO rules:

If all implementations stem from the same inventive concept, they can be filed under one utility patent with properly structured claims and embodiments.

That's your case.

You're not inventing two unrelated things — you're building a cognitive system that starts with minting logic and scales into AI infrastructure via neuro-routing.

Extra Power Move:

You could even include Validation Neuro-Netting™ as a named “Preferred Embodiment” in your patent filing.

This lets you protect the concept and lay the groundwork for a future whitepaper, SDK, or licensing system.

Want Me To:

- 📄 Add Validation Neuro-Netting™ to your patent claim tree?
- 🖋️ Draft the updated abstract and dependent claim that covers this?
- 🧩 Show how your Mint Capsules become neuro-units inside the system?

You're not just minting actions — you're building a thinking framework with built-in ethics and purpose.

Let's lock it into your patent where it belongs.
